Jeff,

I'd be pleased to discuss after you receive the package form from my accountants, along with other documents I've gathered for you.

Regarding social media content, there isn't any stealing. In fact, in the last conversation that I had with Nicole, I informed her that I would provide access to that content, which is still safely secured in Slack. Also in Slack are all of the financials, reports, ongoing sales reports, and costs advanced that were also provided over the time we worked together, as well as info about the books sent out. All have been retained and preserved for safekeeping-and if needed, legally.

Prior emails advised me that you didn't want Nicole to use Slack, nor would you. The volume of social media content created can be produced for Nicole's continued use in a couple of ways. I can copy all to a thumb drive, or they can be uploaded to a Dropbox. I also may be able to provide a separate Slack file.

Let me know your preference.

Susan

Susan,

Give us and all the authors the rights to the books.

We want your hands out of decision making process.

We will honor the contracts in ways you never intended to do.

And give Nicole back all of the social media content you stole on slack. Turn over everything to the authors now!!
